Chemical Bonding and Molecular Properties

Chemical bonding describes the forces that hold atoms together in compounds. There are two main types of bonds: ionic and covalent. Ionic bonds form when electrons transfer from one atom to another, creating charged ions that attract each other. Covalent bonds occur when atoms share electrons to fill their outer shells, forming molecules.

Molecules formed by covalent bonds can be polar or nonpolar. Polarity depends on the difference in electronegativity between atoms. Electronegativity measures an atom's ability to attract electrons in a bond. When two atoms with different electronegativities bond, electrons are shared unequally, causing a polar molecule with positive and negative ends. Nonpolar molecules share electrons evenly and do not have charged poles.

Molecular properties such as melting point, boiling point, and solubility depend on the types of bonding and molecular shape. Polar molecules often dissolve in water because water is polar too, while nonpolar molecules dissolve better in nonpolar solvents. Understanding chemical bonding and molecular polarity helps chemists predict how substances interact and behave in different environments.
