China Moves Out Christopher H. Sharman, 2015 Over the last decade the People's Liberation Army Navy PLAN has increased the frequency duration complexity and distance from the mainland of its operations Not only does China maintain a permanent counterpiracy escort flotilla in the Indian Ocean it also now routinely conducts naval exercises and operations beyond the first island chain throughout the year This normalization of PLAN operations in the Western

Pacific and beyond is an important step toward an emerging new maritime strategy that will incorporate far seas defense. This monograph begins by examining the geography, history, and strategic focus of near seas active defense. China's current maritime strategy. It illustrates how the New Historic Missions expanded PLAN mission requirements from traditional near seas operating areas to operations in the far seas. The paper provides a strategic framework for a new maritime defense strategy that would incorporate far seas capabilities. It then examines the evolution of PLAN operations and exercises since 2004. The monograph concludes by identifying several factors that if observed would indicate PLAN incorporation of far seas defense as part of an emerging new maritime strategy. Executive summary
