INTRODUCTION

The flat periwinkle, shown at right, is a small snail that lives on seaweeds in the rocky intertidal of New England. The European green crab is one of the snail's top predators. As its name implies, the European green crab is not native to New England; it traveled from Europe sometime in the early 19th century. Before 1900, the green crab was not found north of Cape Cod. Since that time, however, the crab has expanded its range northward, and is now found as far north as Nova Scotia. Thus the periwinkle snails of Cape Cod are now exposed to this predator.

Biologist Robin Seeley hypothesized that the New England periwinkle population had evolved due to predation from green crabs. To test this hypothesis, Seeley obtained a museum's 1871 collection of periwinkles from Appledore Island, north of Cape Cod. She compared these old shells to new shells she had gathered at the same place, measuring the thickness of each shell, as shown at right. (In her data, each number represents a single shell without a unit of measure; Seeley plotted her data as a logarithm of thickness, which has been converted here to an integer. Larger numbers indicate a thicker shell.)

Seeley went on to continue her studies of the impact of the European green crab on the periwinkle population in both the field and lab. In this lab exercise, you'll explore some of the methods and findings using a computer simulation.
