

Food Establishment Standard Operating Procedures Manual

When must food establishments develop operating procedures?

- All new food establishments, except existing operations
- Reestablished food establishments that change menus or operation

When are food establishments required to develop operating procedures?

- Procedures apply to the operation from describing the activities necessary to comply with the requirements with the food code and Michigan food law. The procedures are used to train the staff members necessary for the tasks.
- Three purposes for establishing SOPs for your operation are: to protect your products from contamination from microbial, chemical, and physical hazards; to control microbial growth that can result from temperature abuse; and to ensure procedures are in place for maintaining equipment.

Why must procedures be submitted?

- Michigan Food Law requires standard operating procedures to be established prior to opening.

How must procedures be developed?

- Procedures are created for use by management and employees. Develop procedures in the language, style and the location for the establishment. An English copy of the procedures is needed for the plan review.
- For those that need assistance, see the following.

What procedures must all establishments submit?

- Menu/recipe
- Personnel hygiene, including coats and shoes
- Preventing bare hand contact with ready-to-eat food (gloves, utensils, etc.)
- Employee illness
- Purchasing food from approved sources
- Cleaning and sanitizing food contact surfaces

What procedures must all establishments submit when applicable to their operation?

- Cross-contamination prevention
- Receiving
- Refrigerating ready-to-eat, potentially hazardous food (time/temperature control for safety food)
- Using time only (not time and temperature) as a method to control bacterial growth
- Cooling potentially hazardous food (time/temperature control for safety food)
- Heating potentially hazardous food (time/temperature control for safety food)
- Refrigerating potentially hazardous food (time/temperature control for safety food)
- Hot-holding potentially hazardous food (time/temperature control for safety food)
- Cold-holding potentially hazardous food (time/temperature control for safety food)

Once procedures are developed, where should they be sent and what happens to them?

- Procedures should be sent to the agency handling the plans as soon as they are ready.
- Procedures can be sent with the plans or they be sent later.
- Excessively correct procedures will be in place by the plan opening (expedited).
- Plan reviewers will make sure the information in the procedures is correct. Be sure to leave enough time for these corrections. Contact your plan reviewer for help.
- Procedures should be kept on file and used by the person in charge and employees.
