each price, we get the quantity supplied for the entire market by multiplying the quantity supplied by the typical firm (from the individual supply curve) by 100. At a price of $1, each firm produces 40 units, so the market supply is 4,000 units (see Point A). If the price increases to $2, each firm increases production to 60 units (see Point B), so the market supply is 6,000 units (see Point B).

What happens if there are not identical but instead heterogeneous individual supply curves? To compute the market supply in this case, we add the quantities supplied by the hundreds of firms in the market. The assumption that firms are identical is handy; it makes it easier to derive the market supply curve from the supply curve of the typical firm, but it does not change the analysis.

Market Equilibrium

In Panel (a), the upward-sloping curve represents the market supply curve of a competitive firm. It shows the price the market pays for the quantity supplied by the market. In Panel (b), the U-shaped curve represents the cost curve of the typical firm. The $1 price equals the average cost of the typical firm, so each firm is producing at its cost-minimizing level of output.

- 1. At the market level, the quantity of the product supplied equals the quantity demanded. The demand curve determines the short-run market supply curve at a price of $1 and a quantity of 4,000 units per minute (Point A).
- 2. The typical firm in the market maximizes its profit, given the market price. Given the market price of $1, each of the 100 firms maximizes profit by producing 40 units per minute (Point B).
