

Paper Example on Global Health Issues: A Look Back to Mid-19th Century Essay

Introduction

Over the years, there have been issues with the management of health problems on a global scale. The answers to addressing the issues of world health problems are rooted in the mid-nineteenth century, which led to the development of the World Health Organization (WHO) as a systematic framework of regulation and action. The development of international health was in response to the pandemic threats which were thought to emanate from outside Western Europe. The WHO was established in 1948 with the objective of attainment of the highest level of health for all people in the world (Clift, 2013). Its constitution addresses a wide range of functions, such as the direction and coordination of global health operations. The current global environment is affected by the Covid-19 disease, and the WHO has been at the forefront in helping address the global pandemic. It has been through the provision of global governance on the best community practices to prevent the spread of the disease (Ruger & Yach, 2009). It also works in coordination efforts to fund and develop vaccines to prevent infections. It is, therefore, important to examine World Health Organizations and its functions in the global health landscape.

Reason for Examining of World Health Organization

The rationale behind the examination of the World Health Organization is the role it plays in the promotion of high-quality health globally. The 21st has seen a complex global health landscape and necessitates effective global actions. The new international era is multiplex and has many keys stakeholders. It, therefore, necessitates more coordination, and WHO plays a critical role in the global coordination of health and diseases (Ruger & Yach, 2009). It is important to evaluate WHO since it was a wider international scope in its operations. Its key roles include establishment, monitoring, and enforcement of international standards. It also coordinates the different stakeholders to promote the achievement of a shared goal. Its leadership and effective adoption of critical global functions promote equitable and high-quality health for all the stakeholders.

It is imperative to examine the global health organization due to its extent of involvement in the betterment of global health. It can be witnessed in its constitutions, which divides its core roles into three categories. First, there are normative functions that entail in international conventions and agreements, regulations, and the respective recommendations. Second, there is direction and coordination of operations such as health, poverty reduction, vital medicine operations, and the various disease programs (Qian et al 2020). Third, there are functions concerning research and cooperation, which involves the eradication of diseases and global emergencies. Its operations are evident in the fight against Covid-19. For instance, WHO Director-General underscored the need for the international community to collaborate in preparation for containment of Covid-19 infection, transmission, and spread into the different parts of the world (Qian et al 2020). It has been involved in preparedness in the developing nations, interventions, and coordination internationally, and resource mobilization. It, therefore, means the examination of WHO underscores its roles and function in the global arena.
