

Geography: The Kruger National Park Activity

The Kruger National Park

Activity (200 marks)

The Kruger National Park (KNP) in South Africa holds significant importance. Established in 1900 as a game reserve, it was designated a national park in 1926. Spanning an extensive area of nearly 20 000 square kilometres across the provinces, Limpopo and Mpumalanga, it attracts a considerable number of tourists.

The park is renowned for its diverse animal communities, encompassing grassy plains, bushy areas, riparian forests, and small hills known as 'kopjes'. It is home to the 'Big Five' – lions, elephants, rhinos, cheetahs, and buffaloes – amongst over 100 bird species and a rich plant variety.

Historically, the KNP was supported by the local African tribes, and during the Apartheid era, local communities expressed their concerns. Over time, following the end of Apartheid, the park has endeavoured to foster collaboration with local communities and acknowledge their cultural heritage. Currently, a large part of the larger Great Limpopo Transfrontier Park, which also encompasses areas in South Africa, Mozambique, and Zimbabwe.

Located in the north-west of South Africa, bordering Mozambique and Zimbabwe, the park's geography varies from 2000 m and varies in elevation. The elevated mountain regions influence the climate, vegetation, and animal distribution. Major rivers such as the Sabie, Crocodile, Limpopo, and Mhlabane flow through the park, providing vital water sources for wildlife. The park is renowned for its diverse flora, with numerous unique and rare plant species, contributing to its remarkable biodiversity.

The KNP plays a pivotal role in South Africa's tourism sector. Visitors can participate in game drives to observe wildlife, embark on bush walks, and gaze through the forest canopy. Furthermore, it provides employment opportunities for local residents. However, the park confronts numerous challenges, including poaching, parking issues, wildlife habitat loss, and the impact of climate change, such as drought and fires. To safeguard the park, strategies include eco-tourism, regulated anti-poaching units, fire management, and improved programs aimed at promoting better conservation.
