Mekkes,2000 A previously developed technique allows an estimate of integral mixing to be obtained from an image of laser scattered light from particle seeded fuel in the hypervelocity flow through a scramjet combustor This previous mixing analysis formulation contains an assumption of a constant velocity flowfield across the plane of the fuel plume image For high speed scramjet combustors the velocity flowfield is quite uniform and an assumption of constant velocity works well Applying this same mixing analysis to fuel plume images obtained from a mid speed scramjet combustor makes it desirable to remove the constant velocity assumption This is due to the non uniform velocity flowfields present in mid speed scramjet combustors A new formulation of the mixing analysis methodology is developed and presented so that the technique can be applied to mid speed scramjet combustor without the need to assume a constant velocity flowfield The Gas Record ,1921 Railway and Engineering Review ,1909 New York Real Property Forms Milton Marks Bergerman,Morton Roth,1990 The Railway and Engineering Review Walter Mason Camp,1909 *Proceedings of the ...
