

A One-way analysis of variance (ANOVA) was conducted to assess the impact of various fertilizers (Organic, Inorganic, Mixed) on plant growth. The assumption of homogeneity of variances was examined through Levene's test, revealing non-significant results across different methods ($p = .66$). Consequently, the assumption was met, supporting the validity of the test. The ANOVA results showed no statistically significant difference in plant growth among the fertilizer types, $F(2, 141) = 2.10, p = .126$. Given the lack of significance, we fail to reject the null hypothesis, suggesting that the mean plant growth scores did not differ significantly between the three types of fertilizers. Therefore, it can be concluded that, based on the current data, the choice of fertilizer did not have a significant effect on plant growth.
