

Wordsworth

Emma Mason: Wordsworth's early life was marked by a dependency on Dorothy, to whom he was especially devoted in the absence of his father, who often worked away from home. He was close to his mother, a figure whom he recalled as a moral and upright influence, balancing his 'moody and violent' temperament.

Wordsworth's cynicism deepened when his mother died of pneumonia, and Dorothy was sent to live with her mother's cousin.

When their father died just five years later, Wordsworth, Dorothy and John came to rely on each other developing an affectionate bond.

His father's finances being tangled up left him homeless. He didn't get along with the education at Cambridge, finding it intellectually and imaginatively outdated. When the college Master died shortly after his arrival, Wordsworth was asked to write an elegy for him. This appalled Wordsworth, who understood elegy as a personal exploration of genuine grief.

Like many poets of the period, Wordsworth protested against the slave trade, arguing "slavery is a bitter and poisonous draught". Bowell argues the poetic attempts of Lyrical Ballads can be read as a broader engagement with imperialism and colonialism. CAN be. See: Huge Narcissist.

Chandler suggests that Wordsworth's investment in the experience and feelings of real people aligns him with Edmund Burke.

Wordsworth's turn to Dorothy at the end of Tintern Abbey can be read in relation to feminized sensibility, the poet pronouncing his sister the source of "quietness and beauty" that sustains his "cheerful faith" against the "dreary intercourse of daily life".

But Dorothy was never simply a feminine presence in Wordsworth's life, being instead a woman to whom he endlessly and publicly confessed his poetic and emotional debt.

Mood

- Batson: Differentiates between the Wordsworthian Sublime and the Wordsworthian Ridiculous. The first is an impressive and elevating voice, reverberating with all the magnificence of a force of nature, and the second voice has a colloquial realism. This first voice is the one of Lines Written a Few Miles above Tintern Abbey, of parts of The Prelude. The first voice is very, very good; the second voice is horrid.
- Keats: Wordsworth's poetry takes readers into the "dark passages" of feeling, "Misery and Heartbreak, Pain, Sickness and oppression," and then safely leads them out again.
- Not as "tormented" as Coleridge, and his poetry is also not as good. Correlation is not necessarily causation, but C's is undoubtedly more interesting as it moves past the rural, and describes 'the self' in variety of interesting, imaginative ways.
