

Malala Yousafai

Malala Yousafai was born in Mingora, Pakistan on July 12, 1997. Her father, a teacher who ran a school for girls in their village, was committed to Malala's education. Malala loved school, but when the Taliban seized their village, they forbid the people there to do many things they had formerly enjoyed. Television and music were banned, and girls were no longer permitted to attend school. Anyone who disobeyed these edicts was punished harshly.

Malala spoke out publicly about how girls had the right to an education, she became a target of the Taliban. One day in October 2012, when she was on the bus on her way home from school, a man wearing a mask got on the bus and asked, "Who is Malala?" He then shot her in the head.

Malala woke up after ten days in the hospital. During that time, her story had spread around the world and people everywhere were praying for her to get well. She underwent several surgeries and months of rehabilitation before she was able to return home to her family, now living in the United Kingdom.

Malala has chosen to make the most of her situation as a public figure, and today she continues to fight for girls to have the right to an education. Working with her father, she established the Malala Fund, which helps girls achieve their dreams. For this work, Malala was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in December 2014, making her the youngest-ever Nobel laureate. She graduated from Oxford University, and today spends her time traveling and supporting educators and activists on behalf of girls struggling to go to school.

1. Where was Malala born?
2. Who took over Malala's village and declared girls could not go to school?
3. Why was Malala shot?
4. What is Malala the youngest person ever to do?
5. What kind of work does Malala do today?
