Radioactivity: Types, Half-Life & Safety

Science uses communication skills and/or by applying knowledge and innovative thinking often faced with a real-world issue or problem requiring a solution. Using critical and creative thinking, students can have a positive impact, understanding the problem fully, identifying its causes and effects, and the first step in finding an effective resolution.

Designing solutions requires considering various constraints, such as budget, time, and safety concerns. Students may be part of a solution through local challenges, problems, and the impact they might have on the world. For example, creating solutions for a water filter that affect its cost and ease of use, which influence the effectiveness of the solution.

After identifying a solution, determining how it works, what constraints affected it, and any consequences that may affect them and provide feedback on the idea. Communication, group work, and safety are important in this process of the innovation and solution phase. This process can be applied to various fields such as engineering, environmental science, and health communication.
