

An Inspector Calls, J B Priestley

EXAM QUESTIONS AND MARK SCHEMES

1. 'The mystery of the play revolves around Inspector Goole.'

How far do you agree with this view?

You must consider language, form and structure in your answer.

(Total for Question = 30 marks)

MARK SCHEME:

This is not an exhaustive list but the following points may be made:

(AO1)

- The audience is presented with many unanswered questions in the play some of which relate to mysterious possibilities. The identity of Inspector Goole, for example, suggests supernatural origins..
- Inspector Goole has the gravity of a police officer, but seems to know much more than a real policeman investigating a crime. Sheila comments: 'He never seemed like an ordinary Police Inspector'. There is also mystery about the identity of Eva Smith/Daisy Renton
- Eva's diary is cited as the means by which the Inspector finds out about Eva/Daisy's life but it is never seen by the audience or the characters.
- the photograph shown to each of the characters individually is also a source of mystery as there is no evidence that each is looking at the same girl. Priestley leaves the idea open to the audience that Eva Smith is representative of many young women in difficult circumstances living in England at the time.
- Gerald discovers, following his walk, that there is no police officer named Goole working on the Brumley force: 'That man wasn't a police officer'. However, the mystery takes a new turn with the telephone call from the police at the end of the play.
- Inspector Goole's real identity is a mystery. He could be the figure of Death, the embodiment of conscience, an avenging angel or even the ghost of Eva Smith's dead child.

(AO2)

- Language: the name 'Goole' bears a resemblance to the word 'ghoul', suggesting a mysterious connection.
 - Language: the description of the Inspector by several characters suggests that he is mysterious, for example 'peculiar' and 'suspicious'. Mrs Birling comments on his 'extraordinary' manner.
 - Language/Form: as a form of morality play, the voice of Priestley can be heard through the Inspector, most clearly and unfiltered, when he comments: 'if men will not learn that lesson, then they will be taught it in fire and blood and anguish'. The fiery, hellish imagery has supernatural connotations.
 - Form/Structure: the atypical detective story unravels through a series of successive exchanges and revelations.
 - Structure: mysterious events and coincidences form much of the play's tension and shape. Critically, Mr Birling is pontificating about the need for a man 'to mind his own business and look after himself and his own' when the doorbell rings, heralding the Inspector's arrival.
- Structure: the ending of the play has a mysterious effect. The telephone call from the real police officer, explaining about a girl who has died, comes when the Inspector has left.
