

When we first heard about the London Riots: Revisted idea we initially shunned it, saying it was bringing up bad memories and showing London in a bad light. However with director and Editor Dan Veale at the helm and Producer Edward McNerney this documentary really has come to light. They interestingly use three different view points of the riots to produce a rather more sophisticated and endearing representation. It is this dynamic portrayal that sets it apart from all other heart wrenching sad documentaries. The reality of the whole thing comes through so easily that it feels more like real life rather than having it read out to you from the news. This hour long one off documentary opens up the riots and lets you understand and make up your own mind about them. We interviewed director and editor Dan Veale about his thoughts and feelings towards the documentary.

Interviewer: So when the idea of the London riots and a documentary about it came across your desk, how did you feel about it?

Dan: initially I wasn't intrigued by the idea, the generic labelling and animosity surrounding the subject didn't excite me at all, it was only after having a meeting with victims and convicts of the London riots that I became more closely attached and keen.

Interviewer: So you wanted to help these people ?

Dan: I wouldn't say help, I more wanted to create a more realistic account of what they went through, a more down to earth explanation, rather than all of this "goobeldy goop" they stream on the news. I never wanted it to be a charity, I wanted to portray it so the audience could decide. Interviewer: ahh okay, and when you made the documentary did you have any inspiration?

Dan: erm... in a way docs like ross kemp and such gave me inspiration to go the other way, the heart wrenching portrayals really wasn't what I was going for, I wanted it to be realistic and gritty yet presented in a light way. I think me and Edward achieved this.

Interviewer: How was working with Edward?

Dan: it was a pleasure as always, we worked previously together however I feel that with this one we really fused well together and came up with, well hopefully a fun interesting documentary.
