After he enrolled in the University of California at Los Angeles (UCLA), Damon Thompson experienced auditory hallucinations. He believed other students in the classroom and dormitory were criticizing him. School administrators eventually learned of Thompson's delusions and attempted to provide mental health treatment. However, one morning Thompson stabbed fellow student Katherine Rosen during a chemistry lab. Rosen sued the university and several of its employees for negligence, arguing they failed to protect her from Thompson's foreseeable violent conduct.

UCLA is a state educational institution. Based on the decision in the Avifo case, what should the court decide? Consider whether UCLA has a duty to protect students from injury on the campus and, if so, what types of injuries. Be sure to consider what is different in this factual pattern from the
