Junior Graphic Mavis Kitcher (Mrs),2011-12-07 Community Participation in School Management Kazuro Shibuya,2022-09-12 Nobody denies that trust in schools is key to success in generating any educational outcomes However trust is often eroded resulting in conflicts alienation and differentiation among school level stakeholders This book analyses school based management SBM of education through the lens of relational trust in the context of Ghana revealing how community participation in school management leads to educational outcomes Conducting quantitative analysis of headteacher questionnaires from public basic schools and qualitative analysis of case study schools in the Akatsi South District of Ghana Shibuya offers critical insights into building sustainable relationships between individual households and geographical school communities He argues it is critical to highlight relational trust as an analytical tool to examine relationships between actors and factors in school management The research finds that trust in schools is a two way mechanism and the mutuality of expectations and obligations among stakeholders is essential if children s learning outcomes are to improve With its mixed methods approach this book will be a valuable resource for scholars in comparative education those in educational development and those interested in African contexts Journal of Science and Technology, Kumasi, Ghana ,2009 Daily Graphic Ransford Tetteh,2010-07-09 Stepping Up Skills in Urban Ghana Peter Darvas,Marta Favara,Tamara Arnold,2017-08-25 The Skills Toward Employment and Productivity STEP Survey is an initiative of the World Bank in cooperation with other development partners and nongovernmental agencies and carried out in more than 14 countries globally In Ghana the first phase of the survey focusing on adults in urban communities was carried out in cooperation with the University of Ghana s Institute of Statistical Social and Economic Research ISSER the Ministry of Education the Council for Technical and Vocational Education and Training COTVET and the Ghana Statistical Service GSS Basic Education Beyond the Millennium Development Goals in Ghana Peter Darvas,David Balwanz,2013-12-11 Inequity is the central challenge facing basic education in Ghana and undercuts the potential contribution of basic education to Ghana s national development goals Persistent disparities in education service delivery and inequitable allocation of resources in Ghana lead to highly inequitable educational outcomes These inequities negatively affect system quality efficiency and accountability and ultimately undermine broader national development Wide spread inequity in education service delivery significantly depresses system learning outcomes This report describes a missing middle in terms of learning outcomes While a small number of children perform well the majority of pupils more than 60% pass through primary school without becoming proficient in numeracy and literacy Specifically children from Ghana s northern regions and deprived districts poor and rural households and ethnic and linguistic minorities students who require the most support to meet learning outcomes receive on average disproportionately fewer resources from the government than their peers Systemic inequities create this missing middle and drag down system performance Following a decade of rapid change as of 2013 more children are attending basic and senior high schools than at any time in the history of Ghana. In the past decade, Ghana has realized great growth, progress, and change. Population growth, urbanization, and significant GDP growth have changed the economic, political, and social landscape of Ghana. In the past decade, the incidence of extreme poverty has been cut in half. Introduction of Free Compulsory Universal Basic Education (FCUBE) and kindergarten has supported a near doubling of basic education enrollment in the past 15 years. Delivering basic education and ensuring equity has become more challenging. Compared to a decade ago, more stakeholders are involved in allocating and managing core education inputs, and accountability systems remain unclear and weak. Addressing the deeply embedded inequities, e.g., allocation of trained teachers, support to deprived districts, and populations, is further complicated by a complex and fragmented policy management and financing environment. The persistence of inequity reflects the persistence of conflicting sector interests and poses genuine policy dilemmas. However, recent experience shows that accelerating progress toward equity and quality basic education for all is possible. Several recent initiatives in Ghana point to the possibility of improving equitable resource allocation, strengthening social protection, and providing additional support to improve learning outcomes. For example, children with below average learning outcomes in poorly resourced environments are likely to show measurable gains when provided additional support, e.g., instructional support, learning resources, management support, demand side incentives.

Education in Post-colonial Ghana G. M. Osei, 2009. The prospect of redistributing power from central government offices to local actors and organisations has repeatedly tantalised academics, politicians, and policy makers promulgating decentralisation measures in hopes that such action would cure the social and economic ills faced by their policies. Education planners in Accra regarded decentralisation as an important strategy for raising the quality and status of Ghanaian education. The Ministry of Education (MOE) was depending on the local content curriculum (LCC) to achieve many things. As MOE officials observed, however, the success or failure of the reform essentially depended on the actions of classroom teachers. Even if plans for the reform were carefully designed and communicated by experts in Accra, goals for the reform would not be met unless teachers implemented the reform as envisioned by its authors. When the Ghanaian government enacted the LCC reform, it was depending on classroom teachers to take a leading role in the process of educational decentralisation. The one goal that all members of the system appeared to have most thoroughly absorbed was the notion that as a result of the changes outlined in LCC policy documents, the curriculum in Ghanaian schools should more closely mesh with local conditions. St. Aquinas junior high school, a private Catholic institution, was the only school I visited where teachers were willing to question and modify policies created in Accra. Rather than obediently follow instructions from Accra, St. Aquinas employees reshaped MOE policies to meet their own educational philosophies and objectives. My research indicates that the MOE has not yet commenced to rebuild the culture of education to fit the new vision of teaching and learning; it is promoting. Instead, it is attempting to append the LCC reform to an existing core with only minor modifications.
