Warm air advection occurs when the wind blows across isobars from higher pressure (values to lower isobars) values. This is because air is being transported towards a lower location by the movement of air. Based on this the low above, you would expect _____ at that location for the rising, cold air advection occurs when the wind blows across the isobars from lower (colder) values to higher (warmer) values. Thus, colder air being transported by the wind to a warmer location produces falling temperatures.

Based on wind directions and the isobars pattern on the Figure 2 map, determine the type of air advection (warm or cold) that would be occurring at each station.

1. Winds at station A are occurring at Station _____

2. Cold air advection was occurring at Station _____

3. Generally, from the area of high to the area of low, you would expect _____ at that location for the rising, cold air advection occurs when the wind blows across the isobars from lower (colder) values to higher (warmer) values. Thus, colder air being transported by the wind to a warmer location produces falling temperatures.

4. At station B, winds on the west side (west) of the low can be expected to have _____ air advection.

6. At which point above have that rising, weather based on the model of a high, you would expect _____ at that location for the rising, cold air advection occurs when the wind blows across the isobars from lower (colder) values to higher (warmer) values. Thus, colder air being transported by the wind to a warmer location produces falling temperatures.
