Aha-Experiences in Psychotherapy in Relation to Dysfunctional Beliefs and Self-Esteem Sarah König, 2017-02-15 Bachelor Thesis from the year 2016 in the subject Psychology Clinical Psychology Psychopathology Prevention grade 1 8 Johannes Gutenberg University Mainz Psychologisches Institut language English abstract This study is part of a pioneering project examining aha experiences regarding dysfunctional beliefs using the Rethink paradigm designed for this purpose Findings stemming from problem solving research lead to consider aha experiences as beneficial for motivational clarification a working mechanism of psychotherapeutic change The present study examines interactions of implicit self esteem and therapeutically relevant aha experiences in participants that have no history of psychological disorders Lower self esteem was shown to be associated with experiencing more aha moments regarding dysfunctional beliefs but this moderate effect fell short of becoming significant A small non significant effect was found for the number of aha experiences being associated with a decline in self esteem Given the limitations of the present study future research should be carried out to satisfactorily answer the question of how aha experiences influence implicit self esteem and to examine whether aha experiences are superior to other clarification processes in bringing about therapeutic change
