

CLIMATE ZONES

Climate around the world is based on many factors. Due to the planet's rounded shape, it is colder in the far north and south, and warmer near the equator. Altitude (height above sea level) is also important, with temperature falling about 1.7°C for every 1,000m (3.2°F per 1,000ft). Distance from the surface also affects how much land warms up and cools down faster than water. This means that climates towards the centre of the great land masses – the continents – have more extremes of temperature and rainfall, while coastal climates are more moderate, or temperate.

COASTAL AND CONTINENTAL CLIMATES

Lisbon, capital of Portugal in Europe, has a mild coastal climate. The winter/summer average is 12°C (54°F) falling to 11°C (52°F) in winter – a difference of 1°C (2°F). About 100 miles inland north of the Equator in Bolivia, capital of Paraguay in Central America, continental climate reaches 27°C (81°F) in summer and falls to 1°C (34°F) in winter – a much more extreme range of 1°C (34°F).

MAJOR CLIMATE ZONES

There are different systems for naming and mapping climate zones. Some systems focus only on five zones, others four more. The standard version of one of the most common, the Köppen Climate Classification, has more than 30 types of climate for South America alone. This map uses a much simplified version of the Köppen system based on latitude.

MID-LATITUDES

Most of the halfway between the Poles and the Tropics is located in the mid-latitudes. These climates are generally warm with hot summers and mild, damp winters, although they can vary greatly depending on distance from the coast. In South Africa, Cape Town has a mild climate for most of the year. It is influenced by the ocean currents, the cold Benguela from the Atlantic Ocean to the west, and the warm Agulhas from the Indian Ocean to the east.

POLAR REGIONS

The area around the North and South Poles are colder because the Sun's rays reach them at an angle or a slant, rather than at a 90-degree angle. The actual North and South Poles experience extreme seasons as opposite times with continual 'day' in the north for six months of the year, while the south has six months of darkness, and then the reverse. The Norwegian town South Pole Station (right) is one of many scientific research stations in the South Pole.

WET IN THE MIDDLE

The Tropic of Cancer is an imaginary line north of the Equator, where the Sun is directly overhead at least once a year. The Tropic of Capricorn is similar, but south of the Equator. The area between these two lines is known as the Tropics. Tropical climates are mostly warm all year, often with a rainy season. The island of Sumatra (left) in Southeast Asia is on the Equator itself. It is hot and humid most of the year, with a daily temperature of between 27 and 30°C (81 and 86°F). In southern Sumatra, a range of forest grows because of the
