Introduction

Studying variation and adaptation in natural populations

Question 1 A population's evolutionary fitness

Answer 1 is "Dependent upon heritable traits".

Question 2 A population that does not experience phenotypic plasticity cannot have evolved any traits that are dependent on their environment. The evolutionary process is irreversible.

Question 3 When studying gene-environment interactions

Answer 3 is "Studying the response to a single trait's environment is the most informative method".

Question 4 A population does not undergo range-wide adaptation if range

Answer 4 is "Meaning adaptation does not occur over the entire range of the population".

Question 5 The most informative measure to take to assess variation in a population's fitness and overall population

Answer 5 is "growth of the population over time, over a wide range of life history parameters".

Question 6 The most informative measure of the population's growth is fecundity because fecundity is the
