- 1. Make contact. Get to know key people at the universities you're applying to before you start your application. This could be through a virtual open day or by reaching out to a current student via email or social media.
- 2. Grab their interest from the beginning. When you write your personal statement, make sure you start with a strong hook that grabs the attention from the start.
- 3. Give lots of examples. Don't just say you're a hard worker. Give specific examples of times you've overcome challenges or achieved goals.
- 4. Make it personal. If you're applying to a specific university, show that you know about it and why you want to study there.
- 5. Choose referees carefully. Your referees should be people who know you well and can speak to your strengths. Choose them early and ask them to write their references.
- 6. Practise and proofread. Do a dry run of your application form, including writing the personal statement, to make sure you're comfortable with the process and to catch any mistakes.
- 7. Include relevant extracurriculars. Whether it's sports, music, or volunteering, these activities show you're a well-rounded individual.
- 8. Sell yourself. Don't be afraid to highlight your achievements and what you bring to the table.
- 9. Think about structure. Make sure your personal statement is well-organized and easy to read.
