

Concentration and Dilution Activity

You will be using a PHET simulation to explore the concept of molarity, and practice molarity and dilution calculations.

Purpose of this activity:

- Skills practiced: quantitative analysis of solutions
- Content reviewed: molarity and dilutions

Tasks:

- Complete the following activity.

Criteria for Success:

- Follow the directions below and complete the questions and calculations. Make sure to show your calculations and work for credit. Grade is based on completion, not accuracy.

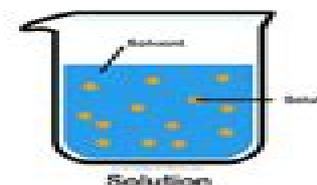

Simulation link:

Concentration Simulation Link PHET Concentration

Background information:

Much of chemistry takes place in solution. A solution has three parts:

- Solute – substance dissolved in another substance
- Solvent – the substance (usually liquid) in which the solute(s) is/are dissolved
- Solute + Solvent = Solution

An aqueous solution is a solution in which the solvent is water.

The most common unit of solution concentration is molarity. The definition of molarity is given below.

Our goal is to use a simulation to explore both qualitative and quantitative aspects of solutions. Follow the instructions below.

Open the simulation link. At the right of the screen, drag the Concentration sensor and place it in the initial solution. At the top right corner, change your solute to cobalt (II) nitrate. Shake the container 2 – 3 times to get a concentration reading of at least 0.300 mol/L.

First, let's examine some qualitative properties of solutions. We will examine how different actions affect the concentration of the solution.

1. Record your initial concentration.

It has a concentration of .300 mol/l , the color of the liquid is pink.

2. Now we will add more solute. Shake some more cobalt (II) nitrate into the solution. Record your new concentration.

It has a concentration of 0.960 mol/ml, the liquid always gets a little darker.
