Exploring the Parallels of Social Manipulation in William Congreve's The Way of the World and Facebook

The presented paper analyses the exploitive social mindset of the characters of William Congreve in The Way of the World and its uncanny connection with contemporary Facebook's instigation technique. In his honest critique of the societal desperation of desires operated by those eager for power, Congreve comments on the emotional manipulation in these personal games. As it exists today, Facebook is a unique social network primarily based on a revised world perception that embodies the meaningless fantasy of people who deliberately manipulate themselves and others into believing they are better and worth more. This paper compares the reception and socialization associated with Facebook use through their analogue in The Way of the World, demonstrating how digital individuals employ sophisticated strategies. The findings reveal that desires for power and influence remain unchanged over centuries, highlighting the timelessness of Congreve's work and illustrating how digital platforms in contemporary culture reshape social dynamics in the 21st century.
