Emil Ruder
(1914 – 1975)

Typography instructor at the Allgemeine Gewerkschule Basel (Basel School of Design), believed in balance between form and function, taught that type takes its purpose when it loses its communicative meaning; legibility and readability are dominant concerns; sensitivity to negative or unprinted spaces; advocated systematic overall design and the use of a grid structure to bring all elements—typography, photography, illustration, diagrams, and charts—into harmony with each other while allowing for design variety.

Max Bill
(1908 – 1994)

Work encompassed painting, architecture, engineering, sculpture, and product and graphic design; studied at the Bauhaus; concepts of art conceived, a universal art of absolute clarity based on contrasted architectural construction; constructed layouts of geometric elements organized with absolute order; mathematical proportion, geometric spatial division, and the use of ascending (Breese) type are features of his work of this period.

Josef Müller-Brockmann
(1914 – 1996)

Leading theorist and practitioner of the Basel movement; sought an absolute and universal form of graphic expression through objective and impersonal presentation; consciously related to the audience without the interference of the designer's subjective feelings or propagandistic techniques of persuasion; photographic problems treat the image as an objective symbol, with neutral photographic gaining impact through scale and camera angle; language of Constructivism creates a visual counterpart to the structural harmony; universal design harmony achieved by mathematical spatial division.

Armin Hoffmann
(b. 1920)

Taught graphic design at the Basel School of Design; applied deep aesthetic values and understanding of form to both teaching and designing; evolved a design philosophy based on the elemental graphic form language of point, line, and plane; replacing traditional pictorial ideas with a modernist aesthetic.
