

Lab 52: Fertilization and Early Development

Introduction

Fertilization is the process by which the nuclei of an egg and a sperm cell fuse together to form a new cell with chromosomes from both parents (diploid zygote), which will develop into an embryo.

Initially, before fertilization, the sperm and egg are haploid (n) and contain half the genetic material of the parent. After fertilization, the resulting zygote is diploid (2n) and contains the full complement of chromosomes. The zygote will then undergo several divisions to form a blastocyst, which will implant in the uterine wall and develop into an embryo.

Embryonic development is the process by which the zygote develops into an embryo. This process is controlled by a series of genes that are expressed in a specific order, leading to the formation of the various tissues and organs of the body.

Objectives

The purpose of this lab is to observe the process of fertilization and to describe the early stages of development.
